Natalie and canine partner Faye

Every step of Natalie's life has been a struggle. From the moment she was diagnosed with cerebral palsy at birth, doctors said there was no hope and she would never walk, talk or even sit up on her own.

Later teachers said it would be impossible for someone with her condition to cope with coursework and exams. But Natalie defied them all - after years of intensive physiotherapy she was walking and talking and later she achieved her GCSEs at mainstream school.

Now with help from her best friend and canine partner Faye, she has done what doctors and teachers thought would be unimaginable - achieving a masters degree and working towards a career in television.

Faye helps Natalie get up each morning, fetching her phone and keys and getting the post. She picks things up off the floor, puts rubbish in the bin, helps take her shoes and socks off and flushes the toilet. She also empties the washing machine and helps at a cash point.

Now Natalie, 27, cannot imagine life without the five-year-old black Labrador by her side.

She said: "Since meeting her, the world around me has become brighter every day. Before having Faye I was very shy and self-conscious. I would worry about what other people thought of me, but Faye has completely changed that. People actually talk to me now, rather than talking about me or just ignoring me. She has completely turned my life around. I could not possibly imagine being without Faye. She's given me my life back and she's given me a future to look forward to."
